Showdown on Steel Union Drive Is Due by Next Labor Day

Men Must Choose Between Company Picnic and Union Meeting

MINERS IN CHARGE

Lewis Directing Industrial Revolt Against Old A. F. of L. Group

By MABEN GRAHAM
Associated Press Correspondent
PITTSBURGH, (AP)—Labor Day may bring some indication of the interest the 446,000 steel workers are paying to the John L. Lewis drive to enroll them into one industrial union.

On that day the workers will have to choose whether to attend their company-sponsored picnics, as several hundred thousand did last year, or to rally at union mass meetings.

Under the generalship of the soft-spoken Philip Murray, United Mine Workers vice president, organizers from the steel workers' organizing committee, known as the SWOC, are pressing at full speed in preparation for the open test.

"Bases" Over Nation
From his luxuriously furnished headquarters in Pittsburgh seven floors above the $150,000,000 National Steel corporation, Murray completed the establishment of a series of nation-wide "bases" of operation during the first month of the campaign which began shortly before July 1.

The arrangement resembles that of many civil organization drives. At the top, as commander-in-chief, is Lewis, bulky president of the miners, and chairman of the committee for industrial organizations. This group is comprised of 12 unions which have defied the craft union members of the American Federation of Labor and have pledged $500,000 to finance the steel drive.

Murray is the general-in-charge through his chairmanship of the steel workers' organizing committee of seven, picked to represent the contribu-

Star Lists Spring Hill But Fails to Add It to Local Totals

A recheck of complete unofficial returns including absentee ballots added to the total vote of several candidates in county races Thursday—but in no case did any candidate swap places.

In yesterday's tabulation The Star showed Spring Hill's vote but failed to add it to the total in the local races. The official Hempstead county will be canvassed Friday and announced in The Star Saturday.

Here are the new figures on complete unofficial returns, showing a total vote of 3,723:

Crate of Melons Sent to Hospital

Annual Gift of Local Lodge to W. O. W. Sanitarium in Texas

A crate of Tom Watson watermelons left here Wednesday night consigned to the W. O. W. Sanitarium at San Antonio, Texas.

The crate weighed 190 pounds and contained three melons.

Melons are annually sent to the sanitarium patients by the local lodge, John Ridgill, secretary, said.

YOUR HEALTH

By Dr. Morris Fishbein

Kidney disease is not so simple as it sounds. There are many types of kidney trouble, and, accordingly, a thorough examination is necessary before any doctor can determine the particular type of kidney disturbance a person has.

Both microscopic and chemical tests of the fluid from each kidney have to be made separately, and the organs must be put to what are called functional tests to determine their ability to get rid of fluid and other waste material from the body.

There are many different ways of causing increased amounts of water to flow through the kidneys. Taking an extra supply of water will do this; as will the taking of concentrated solutions of sugar, coffee, or tea, or of large amounts of beer or mineral water.

All these methods act in different ways, however, and what may be good for one type of kidney disease may be entirely wrong for another. Sometimes a person will accumulate a considerable amount of water in the tissues after taking common salt, but not after taking any other kind.

Nowadays, there are preparations of mercury which have the power of stimulating the body to rid itself of large quantities of fluid. Doctors may use these preparations, giving them either by mouth or by injection directly into the blood of the patient.

But this must be done always under suitable control, because the wrong use of a remedy may be more dangerous than failure to use it at all.

Diseases of the kidney may be insidious from the beginning. For that reason every person, but more especially those past middle age, should arrange to have the work of the kidney and its excretions studied at least once, if not twice, every year.

In this way the beginning of any such condition as I have described may be discovered and proper treatment applied while there is plenty of time to save life and restore health.

Your Children

By Olive Roberts Barton

Children are acquisitive rather than conservative. By conservative I mean "to conserve," or cherish.

I began this article with the idea of suggesting to mothers a little sermon on care to play on to the youngsters. But now I've decided to talk to them myself. And so:

Dear Children: This is a lady whom you don't know, writing to you. But I like children so well that I think you might call me a friend.

Too Rushed to Stop
And I have children of my own, too, so I know about all your lovely ways. I know about the way you see, but I also know about the thoughtless hurry you are in sometimes, because every boy and every girl gets so interested in play there doesn't seem to be time to think whether their tops and clothes are being taken care of or not.

It just happens that way and everybody knows you don't intend to make mother worry. But she does worry; she can't help it. If you leave your wagon too near the edge of the terrace, Jack, and it decides to race down into the street to be smashed by a car, of course she worries. Or if your doll, Mary, the one you were so proud of on your birthday, is left outside overnight, rained on hard, and spoiled, I'm not surprised if she even cries.

Mended Toys Ignored
She can have your wagon fixed, Jack—perhaps—and a new lining put in the "pram," Mary, but you know every kind of repair work costs money. And besides there is a pretty good chance that you won't be very proud of the fixed-over toys ever again. When things are hurt, we love interest in them. And that's too bad. "Oh, that old thing," you will be saying.

Hollywood

By Paul Harrison

HOLLYWOOD.—George Robert Phillips McFarland, who will be 8 years old on October 2, is climbing his five years as a leading man, boy starring in a feature picture. He has the title role, too, for the flicker will be called "General Spanky."

Spanky isn't sure that he wants to be called Spanky any longer. Sounds infantile and is, in fact, a relic of his earliest days with Hal Roach and the "Our Gang" comedies. Mr. McFarland is a veteran now, and seems to be still in the ascendancy. His salary has been boosted from $750 to $1250 a week.

But Spanky still gets spanked occasionally. Sometimes for swearing. Adults around the Roach studio have been trained for years to avoid profanity, but the kid star has picked up an impressive vocabulary somewhere. His other most frequent offense is rough-housing with his brothers in the living room when their parents have company. You see, he's an exhibitionist, as are most actors.

Not Much Play Time
His brother Tom is 5, doesn't look at all like George Robert Phillips McFarland, and is not in the movies. The four McFarlands, together with an off-white mongrel named Tui, live in a four-story house on the summit of a Hollywood hill. Spanky ordinarily has little chance for recreation at home; gets up at 7:45 a. m., is brought from the studio at 5 p. m., and goes to bed about 8

Fortuitously, he still is small for his age; stands 42½ inches and weighs 52 pounds. He has had measles and whooping cough, and now has slight attacks of asthma.

The Male Garbo
Interviewers never get anywhere with Spanky. He'll shake hands politely enough, but after that he is about as glib as Garbo. This doesn't seem to be shyness; he's just bored.

He has a vivid imagination, and to playmates and studio executives he's the wildest yarns.

He's independent and a shade sassy, but not temperamental. When a director calls him before the camera, Spanky invariably says, "Ah, nuts!" When he is confident of his lines and ready for the camera to roll, he says, "Okay, Toots."

No Respect for Stars
Once his father asked him if he'd like to see Clark Gable. Spanky asked, "What's Clark Gable—a horse?" When he met Constance Bennett, the actress gushed a greeting and kissed him. Spanky reared back and made the most frightful face he could muster.

Parent and Director Differ
Robert McGowan, the kid expert who was his first director, declared that "Spanky is a natural—the first genius I've directed since Jackie Cooper."

But Economic Condition Always Has Had Bearing on Elections

By BYRON PRICE
Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington.

Many politicians are almost as deeply interested in business charts these days as in polls and political maps.

Even in ordinary times, economic trends have their undeniable relationship to politics. After nearly seven years of upset and uncertainty, any material business change is bound to bring the politically-minded instantly to the alert.

About the facts of the present case there is little dispute. Not only have various recognized business indices shown a decided upswing recently, but optimism about the immediate future is widespread. In other words, business and politics in general seem at least a possibility that the election will be held this year in the midst of something resembling a business boom.

What will be the result politically? Many things are involved in the answer. For in this respect, as in almost every other, 1936 presents peculiarities of its own.

Held True in Past
The general rule in past years has been that prosperity, in whatever measure it abounds, helps the party in power.

The Republicans made a great deal of that in the McKinley days, and in the Coolidge days. Everywhere among political philosophers, "the full dinner pail" has been recognized as one of the most effective political emblems ever devised.

The theory is that when times are good or getting better, the voter hesitates to make a change; that he listens willingly to admonitions about changing horses in the middle of the stream, and is not impressed by arguments that someone else could do a better job at Washington.

Two Sides to Argument
That is the theory and the experience of the past, and many of the supporters of President Roosevelt rely heavily on its applicability this year. In effect, they believe their strongest practical ground is to reiterate on every possible occasion Mr. Roosevelt's own question to the voters of 1934: "Are you, individually, better off today than you were before the advent of the New Deal?"

No one denied a the time, and no popular.

At the studio he works four hours a day, studies three, plays one. He gets good grades, especially in spelling and drawing. Most of his spare time is spent making sketches.

Spanky still doesn't learn his lines by reading them from the script; a director teaches him line by line, and explains the scene. He can remember as many lines as the average adult actor, and almost never blows up. But he often fails to deliver the proper expression.

Spaghetti Eater
He's an honorary deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County, and proud of it. Spaghetti is his grand passion, but he's permitted to have it only once a week. He has no set allowance for spending money, and his parents are investing practically all his salary in real estate and annuities.

They have to mail about 1000 pictures each month to Spanky's fans. His own favorite actor is Fred McMurray.

Spanky still doesn't learn his lines by reading them from the script; a director teaches him line by line, and explains the scene. He can remember as many lines as the average adult actor, and almost never blows up. But he often fails to deliver the proper expression.

Spaghetti Eater
He's an honorary deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County, and proud of it. Spaghetti is his grand passion, but he's permitted to have it only once a week. He has no set allowance for spending money, and his parents are investing practically all his salary in real estate and annuities.

They have to mail about 1000 pictures each month to Spanky's fans. His own favorite actor is Fred McMurray.

Armored Auto to Photo Lightning

Portable Laboratory Off on Dangerous Mission in New Mexico

By AL WEST
Associated Press Writer
ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., (AP)—A portable laboratory resembling a home-made armored car is invading New Mexico's storm areas in quest of a more detailed understanding of the causes of electrical storms, sought by Benjamin Franklin with a kite, a key and a piece of string more than a century ago.

The American Philosophical Society of Philadelphia, which is an indirect way "Poor Richard" helped to found, is financing in part this modern-day scientific investigation in which he was a pioneer.

The mobile "lab," which easily could be mistaken for a streamlined armored car such as Uncle Sam uses to cart around gold bullion, was designed by Dr. E. J. Workman and Dr. R. E. Holzer, University of New Mexico physicists.

Object of this scientific inquiry, Dr. Workman and his colleagues, Dr. Holzer and Dr. J. W. Beem and Dr. L. B. Shoddy of the University of Virginia, describe as the simultaneous photographing of cloud to cloud and cloud to ground lightning flashes, measurement of the related electrical field, and recording of accompanying meteorological conditions.

Fool-Proof 'Lab'
The scientists were reluctant to discuss the practical benefits of their investigations, but indicated that they might aid technicians in eliminating static in radio reception.

Their "lab" is as fool-proof as possible. Dr. Workman said. A heavy copper lightning conductor encircles the roof of 14-gauge sheet iron. A 100-foot cable chain connected to this rod and the metal covering may be trailed from the rear of the car.

Theoretically, if the car were struck by lightning, the bolt would scoot off into the ground without doing damage or injury to the occupants.

The "lab" itself is mounted on the chassis of a large automobile. There is working space for three men and a driver's seat.

The equipment consists of three specially designed cameras, an electrical field measurement device and a calibrated instrument board.

Cameras At Portholes
Lenses of the three cameras peer out of portholes in the side of the armored car in much the same way barrels of machine guns stick out of the side of an army tank.

"These special cameras," explained Dr. Holzer, "differ from ordinary high quality machines in that the film is placed on very rapidly rotating drums which operate in such a way that the cameras are always focused."

Pictures are taken only at night. The cameras are without shutters. When the lightning flashes through the skies the image of the jagged streak is recorded on the spinning film by its own brilliance.

Lightning itself, the scientists said, comes in a series of flashes, although the naked eye sees only what appears to be a sustained flash. The moving film, driven by a bank of storage batteries, records each flash as a separate picture.

Measure Voltage of Flash
Equally important to the investigation are the simultaneous measurements made with the pictures. "This measurement," Dr. Shoddy said, "amounts to estimating the voltage difference responsible for the lightning flash."

Main attraction of this section, they said, is the easily accessible and diversified terrain, the clarity of the atmosphere at high altitudes, and the absence of general rain.

California redwoods are confined to the coast range and flourish very near sea level. They do not derive their moisture from summer rains, but from fog, which blows in from the sea. The redwoods end where the fogs do.

The World Is Such a Lovely Place

The world is such a lovely place in which to walk and dream and be; there are so many things to see: A white design of cobweb lace; That shimmers as the world goes by; And iris with a cap of blue; The stars—like phiricks in the sky With bits of heaven shining through. It makes me glad that God saw fit To let me share a bit of it

An event of unusual interest and elaboration was the re-union of the Wilson family held with a six o'clock supper on Wednesday evening at the ancestral home of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Wilson Sr., in Columbus. The occasion for this observance was the homecoming of Dr. and Mrs. Manton Wilson and family of Korea and other relatives from Richmond, Va., Washington, D. C., Little Rock, Texarkana, Hope, Lonoke, DeQueen and Ashdown. The supper tables were arranged on the lawn under immense oak trees, that bore the rings of a century or more. A sumptuous and beautiful supper was served with all the delicacies of the season gracing the board, and when grace was said by that grand old patriarch, J. S. Wilson Sr., it was indeed an impressive occasion, to see that father and mother, whose lives have had their full quota of the joys and cares of a long and useful life, the pathway of each having had its shadow intermingled with its sunshine, only intensifying the beautiful characters that have marked their lives. Around them were gathered their children, grandchildren, great-grandchildren and all other relatives of the Wilson clan. Following the supper, a circle of 65 or more was formed on the lawn and by special request, Dr. Manton Wilson told of his work in Korea and related some very amusing incidents of his trip through Russia, Germany, Belgium, Holland, France and England en route to this country. Interesting talks were made by others and the evening was spent in delightful conversation, in which there was much pleasant reminiscence. Several interesting pictures were made of the group.

Long Hunt for Chorine, Son Ends

A 2½-year world-wide search for his beautiful wife, the former Daye Dawn, once-famed chorus girl, and his son, Eugene Jr., pictured just before their disappearance, ended when Eugene W. Weiner, wealthy New York broker, found the boy, now 6, in the custody of a Los Angeles attorney. His wife, Weiner learned, had died last March, her true identity then unknown. The pair vanished in 1934 after a court order divided the boy's custody between his parents. The attorney revealed that Eugene, Jr., had been placed with him by a former cafe owner, now in prison for mail fraud.

Miss Astor Gets

son, lawyer for Thorpe, and Roland Rich Woolley, lawyer for Miss Astor, issued this statement:

"A basic understanding with all details adjusted has been arrived at and will be submitted to Judge Knight Thursday for his approval."

Although details were not divulged, the film colony was agreed that Miss Astor, wearied of the battle in which she had staked her film career against her determination to win back her full rights of motherhood, had traded her famous "tell-tale" diary for the right to have her child for nine months of the year.

The diary became the outstanding issue in the suit when a battle developed for possession of the two volume document in which Miss Astor described with amazing frankness her friendships with at least six of Hollywood's outstanding male stars.

Miss Astor, who had said on the witness stand that the book was stolen from her by her former husband, demanded the diary's return. Dr. Thorpe, contending the diary was his only defense against possible future suits by Miss Astor, insisted that it remain with him.

Then the motion picture industry itself—jittery for days over possibility of the intimate journal's tarnishing the most brilliant names on its roster with a consequent loss in the box office millions—stepped in with the demand that the diary and all its copies be burned.

Engineered by Judge Knight, a compromise—impounding of the diary—day-book by the court—was arrived at. Thus sealed and put away, the diary will be safe from the prying eyes of the public and at the same time available if future difficulties make it necessary.

Under the custody arrangements, Miss Astor is expected to be in full guardianship of little Marilyn during her school year. The child's summer vacations will be spent with her father.

"Reasonable" visiting privileges also would be granted each parent, it was reported.

He is a member of the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity; president of Writer's club, and represented the Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity at its 1936 national meeting in Swampscott, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Stephens left Saturday for Hollywood, Fla., where they each have positions with the Hollywood Sun. Mr. Stephens will be employed in the advertising department. Mrs. Stephens will be society and local reporter.

Mrs. Ray Cumbie has returned from a five weeks vacation with relatives and friends in Gadsden, Ala.

Cargile Wins in an Amateur Bout

Scores Technical Knock-out Over Cal Galloway Here Tuesday

Nolan (Tookie) Cargile scored a technical knockout over Cal Galloway in one of the six amateur fights held at the South Walnut street arena Tuesday night.

The all-local card drew approximately 200 fans. Galloway, substituting for Hugh Keith against Cargile, suffered a gash over the eye in the third round that forced him to forfeit the fight to Cargile.

Two of the six amateur fights turned out to be first-class bouts. The remaining fights were good entertainment, but nothing spectacular.

Pink Carrigan, local negro, won a close three-round decision over Earl Conway in a hard fought contest.

It was announced from the ring that Frankie Hill, clever Californian, would appear here Friday night in the main event of the weekly grapple show. Hill meets Jack Curtis of

120-Degree Record Heat in Oklahoma

Total Heat Deaths in That State Since July 13 Have Been 105

By the Associated Press Heat which smashed even the scorching highs of July was held responsible for 28 deaths in three states this week, continued to sear the Midwest and Southwest Wednesday, centering in Oklahoma, Kansas and Texas.

In Oklahoma, where 17 persons have died from the heat this week, a maximum of 120 degrees at Altus tied the all-time state record set last month.

Vicksburg, Miss., a new comer to Hope fans.

It was also announced from the ring that the wrestlers would "produce" Friday night or the matches would be stopped and admission prices would be refunded.

Jack Savick, Chicago slay, has been signed to appear in the 45-minute semi-final. Savick's opponent will be named Friday.

Five deaths in the state Wednesday brought the weather casualties since July 13 to 105. Drying rivers and ponds forced some communities to call on others for aid. Shawnee found her 24 wells insufficient. An emergency line was run hastily seven miles from Okmulgee to Morris to save lives of thousands of game fish in Morris lake. Enid had an all-time high of 118 degrees, Hollis 117, Alva 116 for third consecutive day. At Guthrie official observer had to send for new thermometer—his had a top only 115. An already-ruined corn crop in Kansas, shriveled still further under heat which smashed maximums in at least five cities.

Real Amazons Go to War in Spain

Women Enroll to Defend Republic Against the Fascist Rebellion

By CHARLES NORMAN
Associated Press Staff Writer

The Amazon, fierce female warrior depicted by ancient writers, has her modern counterpart in Spain, where women enrolled to defend the Popular Front government against the Fascist rebels.

Dispatches from the mountain passes guarding Madrid report women armed with rifles and revolvers fought like tigers to block the Fascist advance, while in cities loyal to the Leftist government they have organized armed street patrols to maintain order, freeing the men for front service.

The courage and devotion to duty shown by Spanish women recall the military exploits of female warriors of the past, the Amazons of antiquity, Joan of Arc, Molly Pitcher, of Revolutionary fame, and the far-famed but ineffective "Battalion of Death" formed to defend the winter palace of the czar in revolutionary Russia.

The Amazons were a legendary nation of female warriors dwelling in an independent kingdom on the Euxine sea.

Old writers credit them with successful invasions of Scythia, Thrace, the coasts of Asia Minor, and the islands of the Aegean, even penetrating to Arabia, Syria and Egypt. No man was suffered in their kingdom, although once a year, to prevent their dying out, they visited the neighboring tribes. Male children were put to death or returned to their fathers; female children were brought up as Amazons.

Some writers regard the story of the Amazons as pure fiction; others see historical foundation for it. The sixteenth century Spanish explorer Orellana reported discovery of fighting women in South America.

The story of Joan of Arc, who led the French soldiers against the English, is well known, while America has her own woman soldier-patriot in Molly Pitcher, whom Washington made a sergeant for her bravery against the British.

Aided French Revolt
Dahomey, a colony in French West Africa, maintained female battalions as part of the regular army. The women soldiers were seen by Sir Richard B. Burton, translator of "Arabian Nights" in 1862, when they numbered 2,000.

During the French revolution the women of Paris armed themselves and marched on Versailles and it was they who formed the guard for the royal prisoners to prevent their escape. Women's battalions also were formed in the provinces during the revolution.

The "Battalion of Death," made up of women in uniform, was organized by the Kerensky government after the downfall of the czar, and not by the Bolsheviks, as is generally supposed. The battalion functioned until the October revolution, when the reds seized power. The women soldiers participated in the face of certain annihilation. In Russia of today women may enter military academies for the study of technical subjects like engineering and communications. According to the Soviet consulate in New York City there are no regiments of women in the red army.

Led Ethiopian Army
The present Russian ambassador to Sweden, Mme. Alexandra Kollontay, was her father as a fighter during the revolution.

The recent Italo-Ethiopian war brought two notable women warriors to the attention of the world—Wubereu Shamene Gabry, who headed an army of 15,000 men which took the field at the start of hostilities, and Mme. Asasefien, wife of Colonel Habte Kikael, Ethiopian commander in the province of Opaden. Defying Emperor Haile Selassie's orders, she went to the front with her husband, was captured by the Italians, later released.

Stamp News

By I. S. Klein

WASHINGTON, D. C., will be the only city in the country in which first day sale of the new Susan B. Anthony stamp will be conducted, on Aug. 26.

To obtain first day covers, send not more than 10 addressed envelopes and U. S. postal money order covering the cost of the stamps required, at 3 cents each, to the Postmaster, Washington, D. C.

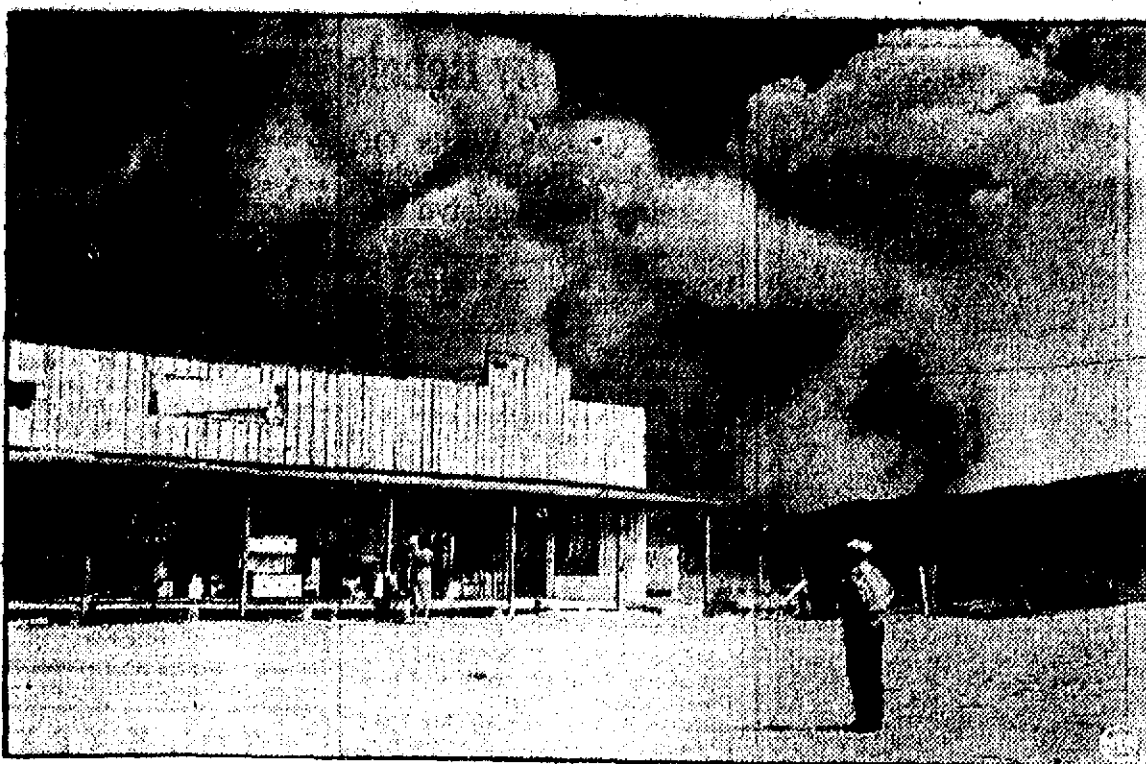

First of the new Army and Navy series of stamps may appear even before the Susan B. Anthony issue, but first day or place of sale has not yet been determined. Decision for release of this stamp may come so suddenly that there may be little or no time to prepare first day covers.

The souvenir sheet of four commemorative stamps, issued recently in connection with the stamp exposition in New York, may soon be withdrawn from sale at the Philatelic Agency in Washington.

Reminders of potato tax stamps, withdrawn from use, are to be sold by the U. S. Treasury Department to the stamp dealer entering the highest bid. So you may expect to see more of these on sale soon, through dealers.

Argentina is changing the design of its map stamp, which incorrectly showed the Falkland Islands as part of its territory. The new stamp will correct this error. (Copyright, 1936, NEA Service, Inc.)

When Death Billowed Up in Great Forest Fire

Down in the form of billowing clouds of black smoke, shot through with flames, hovered near the town of Hins, Mont., and its terrified watchers as this remarkable picture was snapped. Great gaps were burned by the fire that raged through the Lewis and Clark national forest in the Montana Little Rockies range, three men perishing in the flames. More than 1000 volunteers battled for days to bring the conflagration under control.

150 Organizers in Field
District chiefs are in charge of strategic centers out of which between 150 and 200 organizers are working under field managers.

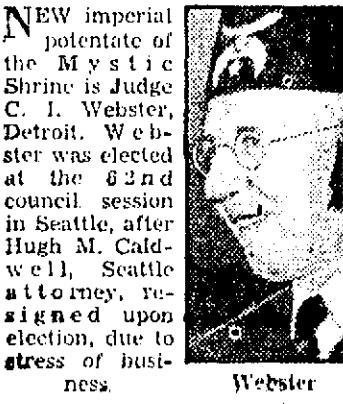

Forty-seven per cent of the steel workers are employed in the organization's eastern district, 37 per cent in the midwestern, and 15,000 in the southern area.

The organizers, who are paid from $6 to $10 a day, generally open their campaigns by passing out literature to workers as they leave the mills.

Preliminary to mass meetings, smaller night sessions are held at the houses of trusted union men or in the union headquarters to discuss specific local problems.

Work On Local Situation
Considerable thought is being given now to whether it would be better strategy to continue the mass meetings or concentrate on the smaller gatherings.

Organizers vary their attack according to the local situation. In one company's mills where workers put in a full five-day week during the depression the organizers urge a higher rate per hour, shorter work week, and point to alleged favoritism shown by bosses to certain individuals or races.

In some other mills where there had not been full-time employment, workers are reported to owe up to $500, for which they drew on the company during hard times for food, clothing and rent.

In such cases, organizers argue that the men should receive a "minimum" pay, and that past debts should be cancelled since the men had gone on welfare rolls, like some of their neighbors, they would owe nothing.

Spent $100,000 In Month
In national headquarters here five staff officers assist Murray in coordinating the efforts of organizers. The office force includes six secretaries or typists, a switchboard girl and occupies 10 rooms for which the SWOC pays $1,000 a month.

The organization spent $100,000, it has been estimated unofficially, in the first month of its drive. There has been no indication of what pay the executives receive, although Murray is paid $10,000 a year by the miners.

Maine Political Sign Only a Myth

Elected Democratic Governor in 1932, But Went Republican

By BYRON PRICE
Chief of Bureau, The Associated Press, Washington

The influence of bandwagon psychology is nowhere better illustrated than by the shouting which arises every four years over the Maine election.

To the uninitiated, it might appear that the whole electoral college, instead of no part of it, must be at stake in this September gathering at the polls in one of the smallest states.

Statements and manifestos without end issue from the national headquarters of the two great parties. The hardest shock troops and the heaviest artillery are thrown unreservedly into the fray. Maine becomes the focus of all eyes, political, the answer to the politician's prayer from coast to coast.

Yet actually, nothing is involved but a few comparatively minor offices and the reins to the bandwagon. A governor, a senator and three congressmen make up a pitifully small "bug" for so pretentious a hunting expedition. But capture the bandwagon is another thing entirely—or at least most politicians think it is.

Psychology Important
Although it is not always true, the saying that "as Maine goes, so goes the nation" has come to have a wide acceptance among voters generally.

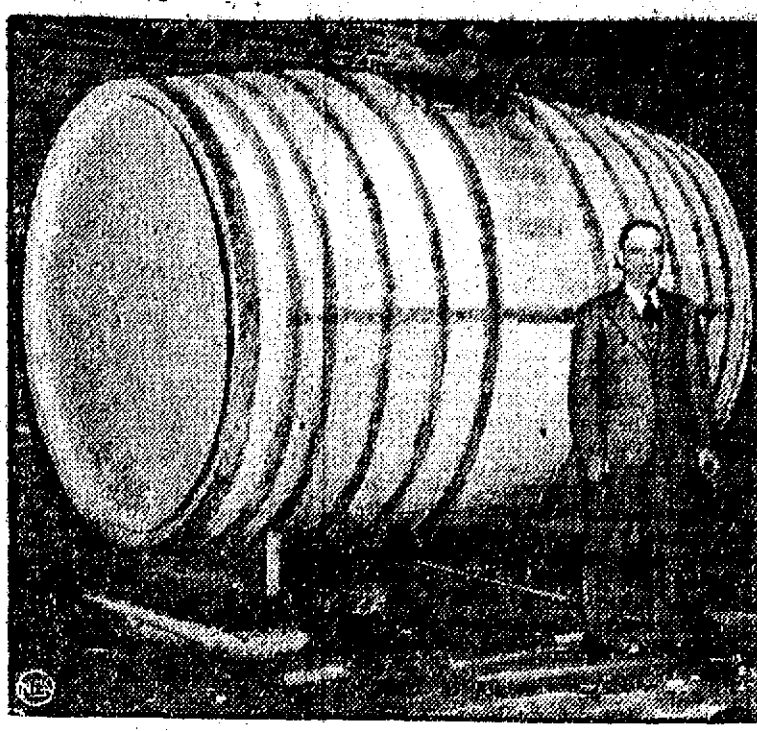

Some Democrats speak of it as a Republican invention. Since Maine is normally a Republican state, it may be counted on to go Republican in Republican years, and sometimes also in Democratic years.

The facts do not even warrant an assumption, with respect to the Presidential election, that "as Maine goes, so goes the nation." Four years ago the state elected a Democratic governor in September, but voted for Hoover in November; for the state election and the national election not only are often by a matter of months, but often are waged on entirely different issues.

This, however, is the factual side of the business and politics very often does not rest on a factual base at all. It deals instead in theories and psychological calculations. With regard to Maine, the politicians are interested not so much in what the returns actually mean, as in the interpretation which the public may place upon them.

There can be no doubt, for instance,

Ready to Sail Ocean in Barrel

Three men in a tub were pikers alongside Ernest Bigazzi, 45, Buffalo, N. Y., war veteran, who plans a yachting trip across the Atlantic in the oversized barrel with which he is shown above. The huge keg will be equipped with radio, a keel, sail, and 60 days' supply of food and water for the ocean crossing. Married and father of two, Bigazzi spent his $1000 bonus money for the barrel, hoping to make inquisitive Europeans envy to see it.

New Rocket Will Try Stratosphere

Scientist to Place Aboard Instruments Only, Including Camera

By JOHN B. CURTIS
Associated Press Correspondent

ROSWELL, N. M., (P)—The phenomenon of gravity which amazed Isaac Newton centuries ago confronts Dr. Robert H. Goddard as he nears a conclusive test in his 20-year effort to unveil the mysteries of the stratosphere with an instrument-laden rocket.

With two of three major problems solved, the Clark university professor now seeks materials that will cut by half the weight of his present 80-pound rocket and thus increase the amount of fuel it can carry.

Success in that, he believes, would more than double the height to which a rocket could be fired with the now used.

Expect Trial Soon
The problems obtaining a sufficient flow of Brine energy and of a stabilization—by means of a "magnetic brain"—already have been solved. Since 1932, Dr. Goddard and his staff have worked constantly near Roswell under funds granted by the David and Lucile Packard Foundation. The grant will expire in September and it has been indicated the scientists will try for a final test before that time.

His fellow scientists hope that Dr. Goddard will achieve a flight of 20 miles or more. The flight would be a test, more or less, but of the question of the possible height to be attained. Dr. Goddard himself is reticent.

Should a flight of 100 miles be reached, however, scientists feel that an automatic camera could photograph the spectrum of the sun's ultra-violet lines screened out by the atmosphere.

Direction of the rocket is scientifically controlled by a gyroscope no larger than a watch.

Like End of World
Each instrument to be put aboard for the final test will be automatically released to return to earth in an individual parachute.

The tremendous force following the mixture of the rocket's fuel—gasoline and liquid oxygen—has made it difficult to get accurate observations during the tests.

"It's not much use," complained Dr. Goddard. "Each observer claims it's too much like his idea of the end of the world. After each test we always found every man down on his knees, hugging the bottom of the observation pit."

Rick and Reckless

Thinking about Brent's nice matter-of-factness stilled for the moment the tumult in her mind, a tumult started often these days by the sight of flowers and the small white cards with their scrawled messages. They raised interrogation marks, these small white symbols of a decision she must make soon.

For, of course, every girl should end her debut with an announcement of her engagement. That was what debuts were for!

In Molly's case it was more urgent. It was two years now since her father's marriage to Donna, who was only five years older than herself. Donna was getting sick and tired of a stepmother role. It aged her a bit. Pressure, subtle as it was, was being brought to bear on Molly toward a decision.

"Goodness, Molly," Donna had said. "What is the matter with you? Four of the season's most eligible men at your heels and you can't make up your mind. You could draw straws and win a husband any girl would be proud to get."

Molly stirred restlessly on her pillow. It wouldn't be Hubert, who babbled things like "Golden Girl" at her. Nor Wick, with his casual acceptance of her as a suitable wife. Nor Donald, with his suave flattery and appraising eyes. That, of course, left Brent. Brent, with his teasing, gray eyes, his good-looking, but not hero-hand-some face, his strong man's shoulders. The thought of Brent both stilled and stimulated Molly. Strange. But Brent was like that.

There was just one thing wrong with choosing Brent. One couldn't accept a man who hadn't asked you to marry him. Donna didn't know that, and persisted in the theory that Brent was in a sort of delirium about Molly.

And all the time there was Brent with his big-brother-like devotion that might mean something and might mean nothing at all. Perhaps she didn't want it to mean anything. Brent wouldn't call her "Golden Girl." But he'd be certain to call her "child," as he had done ever since Molly was 12 and he was a perfectly mad-dening and bullying 16 years old. Who wanted to be called "child" all her life?

Strangely, he hadn't mocked at the name Hubert had suggested during an intermission at Molly's debut ball. "Golden hair, golden eyes with amber lights, golden skin," Hubert had said softly. "Sounds Chinese," Molly had laughed. "Not yellow. Golden," Brent had corrected. "You have a sunny kind of skin and it's deeper gold when you put on tan in the summer."

"Why, Brent!" Molly had exclaimed. This from matter-of-fact Brent Stuart!

If he should ever propose and if Molly said yes, she would live in that fine old home of Brent's, with its mellow paneling and gracious air of age and dignity. A house that was the proper setting for the son of a famous architect, who was making a name for himself in the same profession.

THE telephone tinkled and she heard Rita, the maid, answering. "I'm awake, Rita," called Molly. Anything was better than going over the same ground and getting no where—no where beyond men and flowers and telephones . . .

That was it! Molly wanted a dangerous current in her life. Something to stir her pulses—not this smooth, endless succession of parties and parties, leading finally to a brilliant wedding.

The voice over the wire was only Hubert's. "Sorry," Molly told him, trying to keep boredom from her tone. "I don't feel up to luncheon today. Give me a rain check, won't you, Hubert?"

Molly laughed at Brent's reply. That was the nice thing about Brent. He understood, without being angry.

"Is it a headache, cold and rebellion that will continue until evening?" Brent inquired placidly. "Because it occurs to me at the moment that I'm taking you to Peggy Carlyle's dance."

"Good memory," Molly answered. "Your name's on my date book, too. As a matter of fact, Brent, I've decided to skip Peggy's dance."

"You can't do that!" Brent exclaimed. "Besides being a date, it's a special kind of date. You know I always spend your birthdays with you."

"Just an old childish custom," Molly replied coolly. "Anyway, I didn't say I wouldn't spend my birthday with you. I'm counting on your skipping the dance with me."

"Oh, you are," Brent spoke slowly. "Naturally. You don't sound very enthusiastic."

"What's on your mind?" "I'm planning to celebrate differently," Molly explained eagerly. "Frances Carter was telling me about that new night club near Beechland—the 'Red Poppy.' Frances said it was terrific."

"It is," Brent's voice came grimly over the phone. "No place for you to go."

"And why not?" "You young idiot. That place is in danger of being raided any time. How would you like to wake up behind bars?"

"I wouldn't mind a bit. At least, it would be a new experience."

"Well, I won't take you to a place like that."

"You won't?" There was a dangerous inflection in Molly's voice.

"No. Besides Peggy's party is one I can't miss. Perhaps it is slipped your memory that I'm doing the alteration on the Carter country place."

"Business before pleasure, of course. I'm not going to the Carter's tonight. Why don't you ask Evelyn Lester to take my place? She adores dances—and you."

"Am I to understand you don't?" Brent laughed.

Molly considered a moment. "I don't adore dances tonight, and I adore you only with qualifications."

"Be reasonable, Molly!" "Hope you like the dance," Molly said.

Brent seemed brightly uncrushed. "See you soon."

Molly clicked the phone in place and sat considering its blank face with a slight frown on her own.

Molly laughed at Brent's reply. That was the nice thing about Brent. He understood, without being angry.

take me, somebody else will. I'm being cheated. Kept hoisted up like—like an orchid."

On an impulse, she lifted the orchids and dropped them into a dainty, be-ribboned waste basket near her dressing table. Then she stooped and retrieved them. Rita adored orchids, even second-hand ones. She possessed a Latin capacity for emotion that Molly sometimes envied. Rita would step out with her young man and they would go places.

"And that," Molly decided, "is what I'm going to do tonight—go places!"

She came from her shower more golden than ever, eyes shining, and sparkling drops of water clinging to her burnished hair.

The third telephone call brought Wick's voice. "Lo! night owl."

A proper salutation that hinted Wick howl with amusement at the idea that she could be satisfied with social events.

"Skipping Peggy's dance?" he queried and added, "I'll skip it with you."

"Wick!" breathed Molly. "Would you? Take me to the Red Poppy?"

Wick hesitated only a moment. "Right-o," he agreed. "It isn't the sort of night club I'd pick for you, but it might be exciting. Is that what you'd like?"

"Like is the wrong word. I crave excitement. Doesn't anything ever happen except dances, receptions, teas and cocktail parties?"

"I have an idea plenty happens at the Red Poppy. As I said, it isn't the sort of place we've generally go—"

"That's why we're going!" Molly cried. "Oh, Wick, this is going to be the nicest birthday I've ever had. I'm celebrating the end of my teens with a mature kind of adventure."

"Your birthday! I guess that calls for about 20 orchids," Wick teased.

"No orchids tonight. This must be different. Is this place so very terrible?" Molly's eager voice urged him on.

"Wait and see!"

Wick, Molly decided, as she went about dressing, was an understanding person. Much more understanding than Brent with his tenacious memory for birthdays.

A big package came late that afternoon, bringing Brent's gift.

Molly gasped, frowned, and then laughed. The idiot! He must have spent the whole day assembling this ridiculous home-made marionette theater. The setting for the tiny actors was a lurid dive, with bizarre colors and tiny, absurd pictures on the wall which carried out a very wicked atmosphere. The small puppets, themselves, were perfectly cast.

One, when manipulated properly with a string, lurched toward a couple sitting at a table, and dangled a dreadful looking miniature knife. Another miniature gentleman never could be made to stand on his legs, but toppled and staggered in the most inebricated manner.

Molly regarded one of the tiny actors with suspicious eyes. A golden-haired puppet staring out at the scene with wide, excited eyes. "Might as well be tagged 'Molly,'" she thought.

"Stay home, child, and amuse yourself with this small edition of night life," read Brent's card.

"Child!" Molly's soft, red lips closed firmly. "That's exactly what he thinks I am."

She put Brent's gift back in the big box and closed the top. After a moment, she took the miniature theater out again and soon was deeply engrossed in making the tiny actors perform.

"But if he thinks for a moment I'm going to spend my birthday pulling strings, he's mistaken."

ANOTHER package followed within an hour. "Wanted to spend your birthday with you," Brent had written on the card.

"Since I can't, I'm sending a proxy." The package disclosed a photograph—Brent, of course.

"Of all the conceited idiots," Molly breathed. "I suppose he thinks I'll put this on my dressing table where I'll have to look at it every time I powder my nose. Well, I won't!"

A third package arrived at 7. A beautifully bound and rare first edition. "Just to make up for those two terrible gifts, and also to carry you through a lonesome evening," Molly read.

"So, so tedious!" Molly said to herself, dusting powder on her face, and this time carefully avoiding Brent's steady gray eyes, looking out at her from the dressing table.

Brent was a dear and the book was a gem. But she mustn't forget how stubborn and unyielding he had been. It was going to be fun tonight.

It was going to be even more fun tomorrow to tell that obstinate would-be-protector about it. How she had not only seen wicked night life, but had rubbed elbows with it.

Wick had said: "Wait and see!" Well, she was waiting! (To Be Continued)

Three Civil Actions at Jonesboro—U. S. Probing Tenant Charges

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—(AP)—Counsel for the Southern Tenant Farmers Union announced here Thursday that three civil suits will be filed in federal court at Jonesboro, Ark., soon, in which Miss Willie Sue Bladen, of Memphis, will ask damages for a llog she charges she suffered at Earle, Ark., last June.

U. S. to Probe "Peonage"

WASHINGTON, (AP)—Attorney General Cummings said Wednesday that the Justice Department would submit "convincing" evidence of possible violations of the federal peonage laws in eastern Arkansas to a federal grand jury at Little Rock.

In a press conference discussion of complaints made in connection with the eastern Arkansas sharecroppers' strike, he declined to elaborate his assertion that the evidence was "convincing," but said "some legal questions exist."

Samuel E. Whitaker, special assistant to the attorney general, who investigated the complaints, also has completed a study of the alleged flogging of Miss Willie Sue Bladen, Memphis (Tenn.) social worker, and the Rev. Claude C. Williams near Earle, Ark., June 15.

Hempstead Home Agent

Handicrafts

The state home demonstration club market, recently established at Hot Springs, offers an opportunity to Hempstead county club women who have an inclination for handicrafts to start a profitable home industry.

Wooden products, baskets, hooked rugs and mats, neckties and dolls are among the things to be found on the market. Miss Sybil Bates, extension specialist in home industries, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture, states that women who are interested in developing a market for their products should make the necessary arrangements through the home demonstration agent. All products sold on the market must be high in quality and workmanship. A state standardization committee inspects the products before they are sent to the market.

Native materials found in Hempstead county can be used in making products that are artistic and have a utility value, Miss Bullington says. Some of these materials are honeysuckle, buck bush, splint oak, hickory, and grasses, suitable for basketry; garden products and fruits for distinctive canned products; discarded garments for attractive looking, braided, or crocheted rugs and mats; raw wool and cotton that can be spun into yarn and used for knitting or weaving; and, during the holiday season, evergreens that can be used for wreaths and bouquets.

Concerned Over Soil Losses
Some may think that the national agricultural conservation program is a man's program simply because it deals with a man's work on the farm. On the contrary, Arkansas farm women are much concerned in this plan to conserve our soil wealth, according to Mrs. Esther G. Kramer, district home demonstration agent, University of Arkansas College of Agriculture.

Portions or entire programs of home demonstration clubs in the state have been devoted to discussion and study of the problem and the program of conservation. A farm woman recently made the statement at a home demonstration club meeting that a farmer can be no richer than the soil he farms. Further she made this observation: "The report on Arkansas' annual rainfall is food for thought. We have been blaming drought periods of the past few years for some crop failures for which I am afraid we, and not the weather, are responsible. We just don't have a soil that will hold moisture any more. I used to think that the farm was ours because we had paid for it, but now I see that it is just a trust, and even though our soil wealth was so vast, we have let it slip away until now it will take years of hard work to restore its fertility."

This thoughtful farm woman went on to tell how her family had practiced burning off woodlands annually, and how surprised they were to learn that run off of water on burned woodlands was 40 per cent greater than that of unburned, and that the amount of erosion was 200 per cent greater.

A Crawford county farm woman remarked about the farm program, "Really when you get right down to the bottom of it all, it is just a matter of loving your land. I thought we loved our farm, but I can see now that

Mrs. Raft Sets Raft of Raft-Pine Rumors at Rest

As far as Mrs. Grace Mulrooney Raft, shown above smiling in a new picture, is concerned, the long and ardent friendship of George Raft and Actress Virginia Pine, pictured at left, remains just friendship. When asked if she and the sleek-haired film star were to be divorced, so that he could marry Miss Pine, Mrs. Raft answered, nonchalantly, "It's all news to me." Miss Pine said recently that she and Raft would wed after his divorce.

Blanton Faces Hard Vote Fight

Defeated in Texas' recent Democratic primary election, Thomas L. Blanton of Abilene, above, faces one of the most bitter fights in his career in the runoff of Aug. 22. Blanton, noted for his attacks on reds and his demands for economy in the District of Columbia, has been in Congress continuously since 1927 with exception of the 1928-1930 period.

Late Vegetables
There is no need for Hempstead county gardeners to become discouraged by the drought for there are many vegetables that can be planted as late as August or later, and yet give returns, states Miss Bullington, home demonstration agent.

Beans, cowpeas, kale, and mustard are examples of vegetables that may be planted late. Turnips may also be planted in the fall. Beans should be planted throughout the summer until 6 weeks before frost, says the home demonstration agent. Many women have already planted their fall gardens. Cowpeas may be planted in the garden or in the field along the edge of the cotton rows for a supply of peas to eat during the late fall. The old-time Black-eyed peas, of course, is the best, but any cowpeas will be satisfactory in an emergency.

Kale and mustard may be planted late, and will stand very cold weather.

An English law society unearthed some obsolete laws which declared it illegal to make nice pie, have a Christmas dinner of more than three courses, smoke a cigarette in the streets, or play billiards on Sunday.

"What a Money-Saver Dodge Is!"
says MRS. MARY RANSON SMITH, Pelham, New York.

I'm delighted with our new Dodge! In the first place it's such a gorgeous-looking car. I doubt whether we could find greater riding comfort in any other car...

...It handles like a dream...so easy to steer and shift gears—and the brakes are marvelous...and what a money-saver it is...

We haven't had to add any oil between regular changes... What's more, our Dodge is giving us at least 7 more miles to the gallon of gas than our old car. No wonder they call it the Money-Saving Dodge!

San Sebastian Is Bombed by Rebels

Rebel Cruiser Waits Off Coast—Blooding Fighting Is Indecisive

IRUN, Spain.—(AP)—Five rebel planes bombed the seaside resort of San Sebastian Thursday, inflicting heavy damage in a final desperate offensive for possession of the city. As the planes roared over the city dropping missiles which pitted the streets, seriously injuring eight persons, a rebel cruiser lay two miles off the coast with its decks cleared for action.

Mr. and Mrs. A. H. Wade and Howard Honea spent the week end in El Dorado visiting relatives.

Messrs. Aubrey Stewart, Guy Wardlaw and Leon Stephens returned home Monday for Dallas, Texas.

Mr. J. A. Wade, W. U. Wade and H. H. Honea were business visitors in Hope Friday afternoon.

blood of weary soldiers were announced by both sides in Spain's civil war Thursday, even as the Socialist government forecast an end to the offensive rebellion within a few hours.

Artillery shells whined and burst on three fronts, which were at Oviedo, in the northwest held by the rebels; a tiny cluster of towns in the northeast, centered at San Sebastian; and the far-flung southern front, roughly encompassed by the triangle between the cities of Seville, Cordoba and Badajoz.

France Bars Recruiting

PARIS, France.—(AP)—The government Thursday barred recruiting in France for the Spanish armies, as the Quai D'Orsay renewed its drive for a general European neutrality accord.

MANY NEVER SUSPECT CAUSE OF BACKACHES

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief Of Pain

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once they discover that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidneys are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and waste out of the blood. If they don't pass 2 pints a day and so get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter your 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing.

If you have trouble with frequent bladder passages with scanty amount which often smart and burn, the 15 miles of kidney tubes may need flushing out. This danger signal may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness.

Don't wait for serious trouble. Ask your druggist for Doan's Pills—which have been used successfully for over 40 years by millions of people. They give happy relief and will help flush out the 15 miles of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills.
